“Be Happy”

Hello, friends,

Last week my sweetheart flew out to the states for her moms funeral. We are so thankful for the many who prayed for her and the family.

Tuesday in Bangkok I had a battery of medical tests. They did a complete checkup and informed me that my liver is damaged, and I have gallstones that are evidently stressing my system. I had to wait until today for the final results.

In the meantime many friends prayed.

Today the digestive specialist in the high-tech modern international hospital informed me that 'yes', I have gallstones BUT he also explained in detail that, unlike in the past, when they would have removed my gallbladder, it was their recommendation that we simply monitor how I feel. There is a 2% chance that I might eventually need surgery, and a 98% chance that I would have no negative symptoms or problems.

I have his blessing to continue to develop a healthy diet, take vitamins/minerals, and exercise. Other than that he recommended that I continue to simply “Be happy.”

You know what? I was and I am... Happy. The doctor explained that their earlier prognosis of damage to the liver was incorrect and that I'm well in the safety and health zone. He stated it and then later called me on my cell phone to once again confirm that I understood all the medical tests document that my physical health is well within safe ranges, and that there were no negative or dangerous health issues discovered as a result of their extensive tests.

We know God answers prayers and we do not take it for granted.

I am following the Great Physician's advice. He says, “In everything Rejoice and remain full of Joy,” I also follow the doctor's orders - I am happy and I will remain happy.
